

Writing an Article Reflection:

(Adopted from: <https://coffin.files.wordpress.com/2012/09/writing-an-article-reflection.pdf>)

What to Include in an Article Reflection.

Thoughts and Reactions

- When writing an article reflection, include your thoughts and reactions to the reading
- Use a reflection paper to analyze what you have read
- It should be well-written
- You can include personal experience and knowledge in a reflection paper, but base your reactions and reflections on the article

Don't Summarize and Don't Ramble

- Do not use an article reflection to simply summarize what you have read
- An article reflection should not be a free flow of ideal and thoughts
- The idea of an article reflection is to write a piece describing your reactions and analysis to a reading.

Organize Your Thoughts

- An article reflection should be as organized as any other type of formal piece of writing
- In the introduction, describe your expectations before the reading
- You also may want to summarize the conclusion you came to during the reading and reflection process
- The body of your article reflection should explain the conclusions you have come to and why
 - It is fine if you do a bit of further research and read related articles you find (if you find the topic interesting).
- Base your conclusions in real details you find in your reading
- End the paper with conclusions that sums up what you got from the reading
- Come to some other conclusion or analysis about the article that you didn't consider before reading